

Islamism in Pakistan: Its Intellectual Roots

Kemal E. Argon

A Ronning Centre Seminar

Co-sponsored by the Chester Ronning Centre for the Study of Religion & Public Life, Augustana Campus, University of Alberta

ECMC Chair in Islamic Studies, University of Alberta

The King's University College, Edmonton

In his recent doctoral dissertation Kemal Argon has explored the roots of Islamism in Pakistan. His work examines the intellectual sources of various movements. It is also based on extensive field research including conversations with some of the leading proponents of the various movements currently shaping thinking and actions in the Pakistan sphere of influence.

Kemal E. Argon has recently been awarded a PhD in Islamic Studies jointly by Hartford Seminary and the University of Exeter. He has a wide range of interests including Islam in the 20th century, mysticism and the devotional life, Christian-Muslim relations and religious models of sanctity. He has published on interfaith dialogue.
