Christian Millennialism and Political Thought in Alberta

Clark Banack

A Ronning Centre Seminar

That religion has influenced Alberta politics is certainly not a novel suggestion but the precise nature of this relationship has not been studied with much persistence. This talk attempts to rectify this gap by considering the manner by which distinct eschatological views have influenced political thought within various Alberta political parties.

Clark Banack is a PhD Candidate in the Department of Political Science at the University of British Columbia. His dissertation considers and compares the influence of religion on various currents of political thought in Alberta in both historical and contemporary periods.
